The Marikana Massacre: how could it have happened in Post-Apartheid South Africa?

Corruption has become the rallying cry against the ANC government, threatening to lump the Party's 24-year long grip on government with regimes that have scarred the history of democracy in post-colonial Africa.

Ivan Evans is a professor in the Department of Sociology at UC San Diego and provost of Eleanor Roosevelt College. He is a native South African and graduate of University of the Western Cape, as well as University of Wisconsin-Madison. His areas of specialization include African studies, with special emphasis on South Africa, race and ethnicity, and social movements. He received the Eleanor Roosevelt College teaching award two years in a row.

Food will be served to the first 60 guests at the lunch seminar hosted by UCSD Department of Cognitive Science in celebrating Black History Month by hearing from special guest, Provost Ivan Evans.

■ This event was made possible by UCEAP grant and our effort to internationalize Cognitive Science education ■
